The 5 Replies That Bring Ghosted Leads Back

Five short messages for the chat that went quiet. Copy one, send it today, and watch what moves.

They didn't say no. They just stopped replying.

Someone asked about your service. You replied. Then nothing. Two blue ticks, and a chat that slowly sinks down your list.

Here's the good news: a quiet chat is almost never a "no". People get busy, get distracted, or mean to reply later and forget. The person who asked still wants what they asked about. Somebody just has to reopen the door, in a way that makes replying easy.

That's what these five messages do. Each one gives the buyer something new: an easier question, a reason to act, something useful, or a polite way out. That is why they work when "just checking in" doesn't.

THE MESSAGE TO STOP SENDING

"Hi! Just checking in 😊"

It asks nothing and adds nothing. It reads as "please reply", so it is easy to ignore, and it feels needy to send.

WHAT WORKS INSTEAD

A message that gives them something: a choice, a held slot, a useful tip, or permission to say no.

Every reply below ends with a question they can answer in a few words.

How to use them

- Fill in the [brackets] with your real details.
- Use one reply per quiet chat at a time, not all five at once.
- Space them out: roughly day 1, day 3, then day 7 after your last unanswered message.
- If they reply, stop the sequence and just talk to them.

These five come from The Reply Kit, which has 40 more replies for every situation, plus a full follow-up system. novapex.agency/kit

The easier question

Your last message asked them to decide something. This one asks something smaller, that they can answer in one word.

1 Copy this

After a price or quote

Hi [Name]! Quick one: would [option A] or [option B] suit you better? Happy to work around you.

Why it works: choosing between two things is much easier than saying yes to one. It also reminds them of the conversation without saying "you didn't reply".

Example: "Hi Lerato! Quick one: would a morning or an afternoon session suit you better? Happy to work around you."

The held slot

Give them a real, honest reason to reply today: something you are keeping for them.

2 Copy this

If you sell appointments or limited stock

Hi [Name], I'm holding [day, time] for you until tonight, then I'll open it up. Shall I put your name on it?

Why it works: it is generous (you held it for them) and gives a gentle deadline. "Shall I put your name on it?" makes yes the easiest answer. Only send it if it's true: hold the slot, and release it when you said you would.

The useful gift

If you sell expertise (coaching, consulting, advice) rather than time slots, give before you ask.

If you sell expertise

Hi [Name], I wrote down [three things that help most people with X]. Want me to send them over, no strings?

Why it works: almost everyone says yes to free help, and a yes reopens the chat. The tips show them what working with you feels like. Once they've read them, follow up with: "If you'd like to go further, I have [slot A] or [slot B] next week."

This is Script 3.2 from The Reply Kit

Replies 2 and 3 are the "day 3" step of the Kit's 3-Touch Revival Sequence. The Kit adds the full day 1, 3 and 7 system, 40 First-Reply Scripts, a price-reply formula, and a one-hour setup that puts every script two taps away on your phone. See the Reply Kit →

The one-word reply

For busy buyers, make replying cost almost nothing.

For very busy people

Hi [Name]! To save you typing, just reply 1, 2 or 3:

1 – Yes, let's book

2 – Later, check back in [month]

3 – Not for me, thanks

Why it works: a reply costs one character, and every possible answer is useful to you.

Permission to say no

The one that surprises people. By making “no” easy, you get far more replies, and many of them turn out to be yes.

Your last follow-up

Hi [Name], I haven't heard back, so I'll assume now isn't the right time, and that's completely fine! Should I close this off, or keep you in mind for [next month]?

Why it works: it removes the awkwardness of replying late. People who meant to come back now have a polite reason to. And if it really is a no, you get a clean answer and can stop wondering.

When to stop

After reply 5, stop. Three follow-ups is persistent; more is pestering. If anyone asks you to stop at any point, stop straight away. Put the chat aside, and try once more in a couple of months with something genuinely new.

Do this today

- 1 Scroll back through the last two or three weeks of chats.
- 2 Find three people who asked about your service and went quiet.
- 3 Send each of them reply 2 or reply 3.

Then notice what happens. Most businesses are sitting on bookings they have already paid for, with their posts, ads and time, and simply never asked for twice.

That was 5 replies. Here are the other 40.

The Reply Kit is the copy-paste system for WhatsApp and Instagram inquiries: what to say first, how to answer "how much?", and exactly when to follow up. Set it up in an afternoon.
