

FREE GUIDE

How to Answer “How Much?” Without Losing the Sale

Three ways to send your price so the chat keeps going, for low, mid and premium prices.

The price isn't what kills the chat

"How much?" is the message you get most, and the place most chats die. Usually not because the price is wrong, but because of how it arrives.

When you reply with just a number, the buyer has nothing to hold onto. They have to judge the price on its own, with no idea what it includes or what happens next. The easiest thing to do with that is nothing.

THE NAKED PRICE

"Hi, how much for a full set?"

"$45."

Nothing to reply to. The buyer weighs the number alone, then disappears.

THE PRICE SANDWICH

"Hi, how much for a full set?"

"A full set is $45, about 90 minutes, and lasts 3–4 weeks. I have Thursday 2pm or Saturday 10am. Which suits you?"

The natural reply is a day, not a verdict on the price.

The formula: Value, Price, Question

Every good price reply has three parts, in this order, in one message:

- 1 Value. One line on what they get: the time, the result, what's included, how long it lasts.
- 2 Price. The number, stated plainly. No "only", no "just", no apology.
- 3 Question. Something easy to answer that moves toward booking, ideally a choice of two.

The one rule

Never let the price be the last thing in your message. The last words are always a question.

From The Reply Kit: the full price-reply formula, plus 40 replies for every other message buyers send.
novapex.agency/kit

The Quick reply

When most people decide on the spot (roughly under $50), speed wins. Price straight away, sandwiched, and go for the booking.

1 Template

Low price

[Service] is [price] and [one line of value]. I have [option A] or [option B]. Which works better?

Example (barber): "A cut and beard trim is $18 and takes about 40 minutes. I've got 4pm today or 10am tomorrow. Which works?"

The Guided reply

When people compare before deciding (roughly $50 to $500), they want to feel the price fits them. Ask one question first, then recommend one option with its price. Don't send the whole menu.

2 Template

Two messages

Happy to help! Prices depend a little on [factor]. Quick question so I give you the right one: [question with two options]?

Perfect, then I'd recommend [option]. That's [what it includes / result], and it's [price]. Want me to check dates for you?

Example (photographer): "Is it a few hours, like a party, or the full day, like a wedding?" ... "Then I'd go with the Half-Day package: up to 4 hours, around 200 edited photos in 10 days, for $380. Want me to check if your date is free?"

The Range reply

For a considered decision (roughly $500 and up), a single number in a chat gets compared to things that aren't comparable. Give a range so they can see where they fit, then move the decision to a short call.

3 Template

Premium price

Great question! Every [project] is a bit different, so it depends on [factor 1] and [factor 2]. Most clients invest between [low] and [high]. Is that roughly in line with what you had in mind?

(If yes:) Perfect. The easiest next step is a quick 15-minute call so I can give you an exact price. Would [day, time] or [day, time] work?

Example (coach): "It depends on how long we work together and how hands-on you need me. Most clients invest between $900 and $2,400 for a 3-month programme. Is that roughly in line with what you had in mind?"

This formula is Tool 02 of The Reply Kit

The Kit version adds more examples, a fill-in page to write your own price replies in five minutes, and what to send when the price meets silence, a discount request or "let me think about it". See the Reply Kit →

Five mistakes that lose the sale

- The naked price. A number with nothing before or after it.
- The essay. Six paragraphs before the price. They scroll, find the number, and leave.
- "Let me know!" A statement, not a question. It leaves the next move to them.
- Apologising. "Sorry, it's a bit pricey..." tells them you think it's too much, so they will too.
- Discounting before they ask. You have just told them the real price is lower.

Do this today

Write a price reply for your most-asked service using the right template. Save it as a Quick Reply in WhatsApp Business so next time it's two taps away. Then use it on the very next "how much?" you get.

You've fixed the price reply. Now fix every other one.

The Reply Kit is the copy-paste system for WhatsApp and Instagram inquiries: what to say first, how to answer "how much?", and exactly when to follow up when they go quiet.

The First-Reply Scripts: 40 replies for every message	$97 value
The Price-Reply Formula, full version	$47 value
The 3-Touch Revival Sequence	$97 value
The 60-Minute WhatsApp Business Setup	$47 value
The Inquiry Tracker	$27 value
Bonus: The Comment-to-DM Funnel	$97 value

~~$412~~ $197 one payment, instant download

Get the Reply Kit →

novapex.agency/kit · Card, Apple Pay or Google Pay

30
DAYS

Use it for 30 days. If it doesn't bring back at least one conversation you had written off, email us and get the full $197 back. Keep the files.